

Ahmad Jawed Sakhi

Afghanistan
Student at Georgetown
University

Ahmad Jawed Sakhi, born and raised in Afghanistan, is currently a senior, studying International Political Economy at the School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University.

Prior to his undergraduate studies, Jawed lived and traveled to over ten different countries with his nomadic high school, THINK Global School, which allowed him to gain exposure and interact with many cultures while also coming to a greater understanding of the world's politics, history, and economics. Jawed has visited and lived in many countries across Latin America, South and Southeast Asia, Europe, North America, and Africa.

Professionally, Jawed has spent the past several years working with many firms and organizations in the International Development field. His most recent engagement was a consultancy with the World Bank in Washington, D.C., where he conducted in-depth research in anti-poverty measures and policies in developing countries.

Jawed attended GCI's inaugural Summit and has since then been greatly involved in supporting GCI's mission.
