During the summer of 2015, she was lucky enough to travel from just outside London to Boston to be part of the Global Citizens Youth Summit, where bright young minds from around the globe explore and debate the meaning of being a global citizen. Exposure to some truly remarkable individuals - fellow students, speakers, and mentors alike - sparked her imagination and made the experience something she will look back on fondly and believes has helped form her.

Currently, Jessica is studying a brilliant course that also calls for her to question things presented as dogma and leads her to think globally. She thoroughly enjoys her course, but does try to supplement it with other things, as she strives to be well rounded.

Jessica's passions lay with political engagement, but she has been doing some work around social policy, financial management, and in the legal sphere, too. Some of the best work she has been doing recently has been with the homeless, which is hugely rewarding work and such an important issue.

She is also a great believer in "the greatest wealth is health," so to remain in good health mentally, physically, and spiritually she practices yoga regularly, follows a vegan diet, and loves the gym – Jessica is currently training for a half marathon!

Jessica cannot wait to see other young minds flourish together as GCI Ambassadors, where the attitude of gratitude really is instilled, which is why she is so proud to be on the Ambassador Advisory Council.
